I am writing to urge you NOT to allow cellular telephone usage on airplanes. There is more to the issue than just the safety of the electronics. With the new security procedures both at the airport and in the air, flying has become stressful enough without the added stress and tension of having to listen to five peoples cell phone conversations. I cannot imagine anything more unpleasant or as much as a disincentive to fly. (Except perhaps a plane full of crying babies, but at least they are not knowingly ruining everyone else's flight!) Please consider all of the ramifications of this decision--and don't lift the ban!
